HISTORY OF ROBERT FULTON

In 1765, Robert Fulton was born in a farmhouse a few miles south of the Fulton Steamboat Inn. Robert Fulton is credited with the successful design of the steamboat during the industrial revolution, as well as initiating a commercial purpose for the steamship, and transforming the world's transportation. Robert Fulton began his career as many may not expect. His early education was limited, yet he displayed considerable artistic talent and resourcefulness. At the age of 17, he moved to Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, where he established himself as a painter.

Fulton was a hospitable youth of pleasant manners and appeared to have embraced the opportunities that the city of Philadelphia provided for him. Robert was chosen to paint a portrait of Benjamin Franklin shortly after moving to Philadelphia. However, Robert would soon turn his attention toward engineering rather than painting. Fulton worked earnestly in regard to the improvement of mill designs and contributed greatly to innovations in canal systems. While working on the Erie Canal, Fulton developed one of the earliest "driving boats," which he named the Nautilus. The design of the Nautilus unexpectedly assisted in early submarine technology.

A few years later, in 1802, Fulton contracted with Robert Livingston to construct the first successful steam-powered ship for use on the Hudson River. Over the next four years, he built prototypes of the steamship in Europe and returned to New York in 1806. On August 17, 1807, the Clermont, Robert Fulton's first American-built steamboat, left New York City for Albany, thus inaugurating the first steamboat commercial service in the world. Robert Fulton continued to engineer improvements in steam travel as well as advanced development regarding submarines. However, his most famous accomplishment is the successful design of the steamboat. We honor Robert Fulton's achievements and welcome you aboard the Fulton Steamboat Inn!
